About the artist

My name is Liza Morales and I am a Dominican artist born and raised in Santiago de Los Caballeros. I fell in love with acrylics and developed my skill focusing on portraits, portraying emotion and stories through facial expressions and paintings full of symbolism. My latest work being a collection of self portraits telling my experience and expressing nostalgia after leaving home and experiencing the loneliness of being apart from my culture, home and family, turning every emotion into a new chapter of a story told through paintings.

My paintings have become a reflection of the pages of my dairies, which I have filled with the ups and downs of being far away from home and the unexpected of starting over in a new place. It has become a way to, not only express how I feel, but more so understand my emotions and use them as a mirror where I try to find meaning to the images that I put on the canvas, trying to explain and interpret my own work and come to conclusions that I think would only be possible after painting it first. And through my work I also attempt to create a connection with anyone else who might relate, to feel a little less lonely while navigating nostalgia.

Behind the painting

Every piece starts as a sketch before it becomes a painting. I like collectors and clients to see the journey, not just the finished canvas.

When working on commissions I like to take time to plan out the piece with the client, and during the whole process of creation I share the progress so they can see the painting take shape, making sure it is exactly what they requested.
